We have 10 entrants in this the final month, of this increasingly popular competition, with three pilots having achieved the ten maximum individual flight time. The ten minute maximum flight time is a harder target time to achieve than at first appears - that's the challenge - and then try to do it three times in one hour! Once again a pilot, Ian Pratt, managed two 10 minute flights this month and finished second, but our overall winner achieved the top score with just one 10 minute maximum, backed up by two good scores. So congratulations go to Chris Hague who equals Tom Airey's points score but wins the overall series having achieved 37 points each, the tie-break with Tom was decided by highest placings (two wins verses one win). Next up with four good results in a row was Ian Pratt, who continued with ever improving experimentation all season and finished in a strong third place. Both Peter Kessell and Malcolm McKendrick each had wins earlier in the season. Remember, it is the best four scores to count. We look forward to more of the same next year. Happy thermalling!.
